Important Notes:

Under section 141 of the Fish Resources Management Act 1994 entitlement under an authorisation may, in certain circumstances, be transferred to another authorisation.

Where a security interest is noted on the register against an authorisation, then a section 141 application may only be given immediate effect where the security holder has given consent to the temporary transfer of entitlement.

Where enduring consent to the temporary transfer of entitlement has been given by a security holder by means of executing an Enduring Consent form (Form N-3), then the Department is able to act on that consent until both (a) the security holder has given written notice revoking the consent and (b) the Department has given effect to that notice of revocation in the Department's internal administrative and on-line systems.

A security holder may give notice revoking any enduring consent given to the temporary transfer of entitlement, by executing this form and giving it to the Department.

Where notice is given revoking any enduring consent, the revocation of the consent will not take effect until the Department has given effect to that notice of revocation in the Department's internal administrative and on-line systems.

The Department will advise the security holder when a Notice of Revocation of Enduring Consent (Form N-4) has been given effect.

The revocation of any enduring consent will not affect any temporary transfers of entitlement effected before the revocation of the consent.

Notice of revocation of enduring consent of security holder
